The Jolly Postman by Janet and Allan Ahlberg

My favourite types of books to read are books that remind of special times in the past. I love how the Postman travels to different houses and encounters all sorts of characters on his way. The envelopes with games and letters to discover add an extra element of magic as well as how the story is told through rhyme. Perhaps you could draw a picture and send it to an author, showing them your favourite part of a story.

The Queen's Hat by Steve Antony

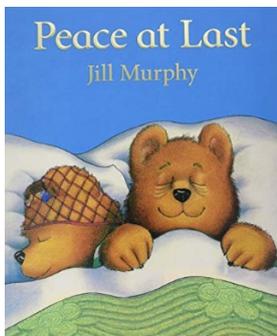

I enjoy reading books about London and especially like this one as the Queen's Hat travels all across London. The soldiers increase as the story unfolds and the pictures are very clever showing them on and around London's Historic Landmarks including Big Ben, The London Eye, and Tower Bridge as they try to catch the hat. Perhaps you could visit one of London's Landmarks.

Peace at Last by Jill Murphy.

Poor daddy bear, all he wants is some sleep. Yet noises everywhere are keeping him awake from the humming refrigerator to the cuckoo clock, the hooting owl or the dripping tap. My favourite part is all of the noises and the sounds that I can make for this story. What sounds have you ever heard when you are trying to sleep?

What the Ladybird Heard by Julia Donaldson.

I love the characters in this book and am amazed at how clever the little ladybird is with her plan of how to catch the bad guys and all of the different noises that the animals have to make. If you have ever heard Miss English read a story you will know how she enjoys making noises to go along with it. Perhaps you could think of your own trail to follow.
